

Working from home arrangements have become an important part of many Queenslanders' working lives.

Currently, there is no clear process for workers in the public sector to access working from home arrangements. Often, it is up to the decision of individual managers.

Without clear guidelines around working from home we run the risk of this entitlement being eroded.

Union members are getting together to talk about this issue and how we can ensure those who are able can have access to arrangements that will improve their working lives.
